IN presenting to my fellow citizens a brief transcription from my "Private Journal" of Current Events for the year 1863, I would express the fond hope that while it serves to recall to memory the names of loved ones, gone before us, and scenes in which we have mingled for the support of our country and for the glory of our common God, it may also tend, in some degree, to make us cherish a deeper regard for the prosperity of our beautiful town; and strive more earnestly that the "Golden Rule" of Christ may pervade and twine around and beautify the whole structure of our social life.

Should this little register of times in "old Exeter," reach our brave soldiers at the seat of war, let me tell them that we have been proud of the valor of the sons of this town on the stern and bloody field of conflict, whether at Williamsburg, James Island, Fredericksburg, Port Hudson, or Gettysburg; or when the old flag has been torn and flying piece-meal over the slippery deck of the battle ship at sea. We honor you, we thank you, we love you; for by such prowess our country rises glorious and strong above the shock of this abominable rebellion; and we pray that the richest benedictions of the God of the loyal, the brave and the true-hearted may ever rest upon your heads.

 The observations in meteorology were taken for the Smithsonian Institution, and in accordance with its rules, at 7 A. M. and at 2 and at 9 P. M. The notations of the Barometer and Thermometer are the maximum and minimum for each month.
